Dissertation Summary: *National Identity and the Right to Self-Government

Thesis Advisor: Andrei Marmor

Although national identity is valuable in a variety of ways, I argue that its value is not sufficient to justify a group's right to govern itself, either in the form of an independent, sovereign state or an autonomous, sub-state government. My thesis is somewhat unusual—most philosophers who affirm the value of national identity also endorse the right of a national community to some form of self-government, and most philosophers who deny that a national community has the right to any form of self-government also deny the value of national identity.
